

Was Brouwer a solipsist?

Looking for an answer to this question, we refer to Brouwer's works, in which we can find most of his statements in the direction he was looking for. These are "Profession of the Faith" and "Consciousness, Philosophy, and Mathematics". After a brief discussion of the circumstances of the creation of the first of the works by the young Brouwer, we try to answer the title question by initially specifying the scope of correct answers to this question. Finally, we answer the questions and, of course, we justify such controversial answers.
